

putting on a pair of socks. There were setbacks, too.

"I was trying to mail something out to a client and I couldn't put the overnight envelope together," he said. "I just snapped. I was like done. I threw the remote at Oprah — and I'm a huge fan of Oprah. She got me through a lot of this, Oprah and music."

He smiles at the thought. Certainly Oprah would forgive him.

His older brother, Ross, started organizing annual fund-raisers in 2000 to help pay for any medical expenses not covered by insurance. This year he managed to bring in comedian Artie Lange, whose father is paralyzed from a roofing accident.
